My Illustration represents a pretty and serviceable winter garb for a young miss. It is made of wood-brown vicuna, trimmed with Persian lamb. The jacket is not only lined with silk, but has also a flannel inlay, and with it is worn a silk blouse of the same shade as the cloth, belted in with a narrow leather belt. The plastron is sewed into the seam at the right shoulder, but is buttoned on both sides. The enaulets are continued around the back in the manner of a short pelerine. In front the skirt is slit up into tabs, which are trimmed as shown, with fur. The hat has a crown in the same material and is trimmed with the same for Muffs promise to become more reasonable in size. It seems too ridiculous to aggravate the evil of cold fingers by carrying about a must too small to cover the hands. would be far more reasonable for the lady of tashion to revive the quaint old custom of carrying a live poodle about in cold weather to serve as a muff, but the society for the prevention of cruelty, etc., would soon put a stop to such a practice, no matter how picstop to such a practice, no matter how pic-turesque it might be, especially when the to the edge of the skirt.

Astrachan will be a modish fur with visiting or reception purposes. It goes well with cloth. One very becoming way to apply this trimming is to run three narrow rows of it around the bottom of the skirt and to run a single row around the cut out of the bodice and so down to the waist, thus framing the embroidered plastron and producing a fine effect. There is a very handsome woolen material with a rough surface simulating astrachan which will be very popular for winter costumes. It looks very well in gray or black.

Seen Around the Smoky City. The winter has hardly begun, as to millinery, but still the busy brain of the headgear fashioner is at work planning the spring styles. "Hats have been trimmed at the back, in the front, at one side and on top," said one of Pittsburg's most fashionable milliners yesterday, "and now it seems as if there is nothing left but to trim them on both sides." It is said it will take a very pretty and modish girl to wear a bat done up in this manner, for they are decidedly trying but very chic.

This is the season of combinations both in street and house dresses. Some lovely creations, or confections-that's the new descriptive word-are shown in heliotrope and black, a delicate tint of lavender a black. Nile green and black and dainty pale blue and pale pink with black velve trimmings. An odd but rather stylish gown worn by one of Pittaburg's fair maidens at a reception last evening was of light tan corded silk with sleeves, girdle and small ruffles around the edge of the skirt of mulberry silk. This color is said to resemble grape juice, or something be-tween majents and heliotrope. The slippers and gloves matched the mulberry silk. Among the new purses are the heartshaped. It is imperative now that no mat- revolted. ter what the form of your purse, it must in every case match your costume. A pretty novelty in bridal fans is gauze, with bride's future initials traced along Knickerbockers as Petticoats. Winter petticonts are now being in a very great measure superseded by knickerbockers in London, and many ladies when ordering a new walking dress have a pair of knickerbockers of the same material or in fine serge sent with it. They render walking far less fatiguing than the heavy winter petticoats. Each petticoat not only adds to the weight of the dress, but also impedes the movements of the legs by constantly pressing against them in the act of walking. That is one reason why girls when walking with their brothers become latigued so much sooner than boys do. With serge knickerbockers fatigue is avoided without any diminution

Fads, Follies and Folbles, HANDERCHIEFS of pale pink, blue, lavender, green, or yellow chiffon, hem-stitched and finished with a very narrow

ALL manner of odd little waists, to be worn with the same plain skirt of servicesble black silk, will be of great help in pro-ducing a pleasant variety in the wardrobe. THE bracelet glove has a richly embroidered band that fits tightly around the wrist, and it is perfumed by a secret process, whereby the perfume cannot be destroyed. Ir would be a pity for the plain, light, fined skirt that has been worn this year to go out o vo ue yet awhile, for it would be difficult to invent another more comportable

He Thinks Europe Will Buy Grain on Its Own Terms if the Bill Passes. NEW YORK, Dec. 23 .- The following letter was sent to-day by Henry Clews to Senstor Hiscock: I notice the anti-option bill is now before the Senate for discusson, and the apprehen-sion that it may become a law has knocked the grain markets of the country endwise. No. 3 cash wheat sold yesterday in Chicago seems to be no buyers, except on a retail basis. This only goes to show what may be basis. This only goes to show what may be expected in the event of such a ruinous measure as that of the anti-option bill becoming a law. The dealings in options in grain are virtually suspended pending their own prices, which will become universal if the dealings in options, which heretofore have made and sustained the markets, are prohibited by national law. The effect will, necessarily, be to bankrupt the bonanza farmers who produce the bulk of our wheat crop.

I hope you will continue to exercise your powerful influence, as you did during the last session, in preventing such a pernicious personal law. measure from becoming national law. We are now exporting gold, when we ought to be sending forward our cotton and cereals. he sending forward our cotton and cereals. The whole of Europe has been waiting for the passage of the anti-option bill before buying, so as to admit of their doing so on their own terms as formerly, before options were dealt in. But for this, we would now be sending forward products and keeping our gold at home.
